DUTY OF CARE FOR AN EVOLVING WORLD

As the threat landscape becomes more complex, leaders acknowledge there is a gap in employee preparedness. In fact, 65% of security and HR executives report an increase in the number of security threats their organization faces, compared to 2019, yet only 41% believe that most of their employees would know what to do in an emergency while traveling, according to Global Guardian's recent survey.

Headquartered in Washington D.C., our team of professionals with backgrounds in military operations, special forces, intelligence, and federal law enforcement identifies, monitors, and responds to emergencies and threats, helping firms meet the ISO 31030 Travel Risk Management Global Standard.

"Since 2015, Global Guardian's Operations team has served as a force multiplier for our company. Across the globe, including some very troubling locations, we have used a variety of Global Guardian's services. Those services include car and driver packages, protective details, and threat intelligence analysis. Each time, the results have been solid. Our employees have also come to trust Global Guardian. When we need to ensure the safety and security of our employees, I have a high level of confidence in Global Guardian's delivery. I strongly advocate for subscribing to Global Guardian's Duty of Care Membership."
